CATCHING BLUEFISH

SPORT ALONG THE JERSEY SHORE AND AT JREAT SOUTH BAY.

On Board a Fishing Smack-The Question of Tackle and What It Costs. Buefishing for Business and Pleasure Combined-Catching Bines on Shore.

A slight breeze ruffles the ocean. The records soud by under full sail, and the fishing boats, off on the banks, rise and fall like logs on the long ground swell. The surfibreaks on the beach in great combers, which throw themselves high upon the sand and then rush back to mingle with the more congenial element. On the bluff at Seabright stands a man whose eyes, shaded by his hand, are bent fixedly upon a small dark patch on the ocean over which are clustered excited sea gulls. Now and then the patch scintillates with silver spots, and the gulls throw themselves from their lofty height into the silver kaleidoscope. It seems to be moving nearer shore. The watcher perceives it to be a school of bluefish. Soon the school is inside of the breakers and he runs into a neighboring house.

He comes out carrying a long fishing line, neatly coiled and ending in six inches or more of atout wire, to which is attached a lead squid. Removing his shoes and stockings and rolling up his trousers the man, carrying the coil of line on his arm, wades into the surf, and eatching hold of the line about six feet from the squid begins to whirl the piece of lead around his head. It whirls faster and faster. After the retreat of a wave he finally runs down almost into the ocean bed and lots go of the line. The squid flies out straight a hundred and fifty feet or more and settles into the breakers.

FIRMING FROM THE SHORE. over hand as rapidly as he can. A bluefish jumps from the water and the line assumes a marked rigidity. The fisherman hauls yet faster, and pulls up on the beach a six pound beauty. He unhooks the long, powerful bodied, blue backed, white bellied fish very gingerly, for he is mindful of the razorlike teeth and does not care to lose a finger. He throws the fish high up on the beach and begins his efforts afresh. In half an hour the bluefish, which have been in chase of a school of menhaden, head for the deeper ocean, and the fisherman picks up his catch of a dozen or more and walks back to the house. Such is bluefishing on the Jersey

Would you see the sport on Great South Bay, go to any of the bordering towns, and engage for a small sum a sailboat and a captain to take you out. If you do not become sensick and there is a reefing breeze you will have grand sport. A squid and line can be used, or a rod and reel with a squid. The boat keels well over on its side and rushes through the water with an exhibirating motion, Several long lines troll out from the boat, and the squids of bone or metal fly through the water. Now the fish strikes one line, now another, until fingers, protected as they are by mirts, are sore and arms acre. A morning seport will often yield enough fish for a large hotel.

here is known to fishermen as chumming. Several hundred menhaden, or "bunkers," are secured, a portion of floats rapidly to leeward, and often attracts the bluefish within a radius of a mile. A slice from the menhaden's back is put on a large book and the line is thrown overboard, and as it drifts away which swarm about the boat. Bluefish tackle is exceedingly cheap.

A dollar will purchase all that is necessary for hard fishing, while an outlay of $6 or $7 will buy a stout casting rod, a cheap, stout reel and line, and the ner essary books and squids. With this outfit the most fastidious can fish.

Small snappers of two pounds weight are quite abundant at Broad channel and the inlet of Jamaica buy, and also at Seawaren, Prince's bay, the Horse at Sandy Hook and at Barnegat. The large fish running from six to fifteen pounds have been found in great quantities all along the Long Island and Jersey coasts. The season is usually from the middle of July to the first of October.

To be sure of good fishing and big fish one should go aboard one of the stanch little smacks that supply Fulton market with its Friday's blueilsh. A little tact and the judicious use of four or five dollars will secure a berth. These boats go out to the banks of the Jersey or Long Island shore and sail around until fish are sighted. Then they anchor.

Small hand mills are brought on deck and menhaden are ground up. Dories to the number often of a dozen, each carrying a man and menhaden, mush and bait, put off from the smacks and anchor within a radius of half a mile. At the end of the day each dory will bring in two or three hundred large fish. As the smacks remain out from a week to ten days, and meat, fish and freshvegetables comprise the bill of fare, an enjoyable eea voyage offers its attractions in addition to the fishing .- New York World.

A man on the Wabash road is now running varnished cars and eating ple who owes his success in a measure to kicking the general manager. When a trainman prospers and gets a passenger train he speaks of his good fortune as running var-nished cars and eating pie. When he is in the humbler calling of working on a freight train he sometimes calls it eating corn bread in the dog house. General Manager Tallmage, of the Wabash, was of the old school of railroaders, who believed in attending to the details of the line. He had been a trainman himself and he knew the weaknesses of the craft. He would watch the train sheets, and if a crew reported delays at a certain point on about every run he would go down there quietly and keep an eye out for them. He took one of these trips on one occasion, and supposed his movements were unknown to the crews he wished to watch, for he went secretly as an ordinary passenger and did not reach his destination until after dark. But to use the slang of the men, they were on to him. He secreted himself on a gondola loaded with car wheels, and thought that he was unobserved until a brakeman, pretending to take him for a tramp, came along and kicked him most mercilessly. At every blow of the foot he accentuated the action with some ornamental profanity very painful to hear. Mr. Tallmage did not reveal his identity, but limped away, and he found out that the brakeman who had so maltreated him was really a valuable man, and not responsible for the delay.

After the kicking the brakeman went back to the caboose and said to his conductor: "Well, I fixed the old man. I suppose I'll get my envelope at the end of the run. It's all right, though, This ain't the only road."

Two days later the brakeman was sum-

THE ISLAND OF ANEGADA. A Place Noted for Its Steaming Fogs

and Fresh Water Inundations. The island of Aneguda is one of the rangest of all the strange places in the orld. It lies near the northeastern angle the main chain of the West Indies, and differs from all the other islands near it in being flat and low, the neighboring isles all being steep and mountainous. It is nine miles long and two miles across, and les so low that in heavy gales the sea makes a clean breach over the lower porions of it, whence its name, for anegady a the Spanish for "rowned island." In 1881 it had 719 inhabitants, of whom only three were white people.

But since the establishment of the light house on the island of Sombrero (fortymiles to the eastward) there have wen few, if any, wrecks on Anegada, since the main cause of the shipwrecks was the onstant and swift cutrent which sets upon the island from the cast. Accordingly, the natives are now not often aroused by the slow lying fog which was rapidly sweeperr of "a vessel on the reef," the only call in the old days which would arouse them from their almost perpetual inactivity.
